of the

Dalhart, Texas Area

Introduction:

We present here a permanent, but incomplete, record of the contribution of this area to World War II, a record we believe is outstanding and will compare favorably with that of any given section of similar population in the nation. Not complete in that neither information nor pictures of the many hundreds of our fine young men and women who have served, or are serving, their country in this hour of peril, were available.

We hold no illusions as to the accuracy of the information given here. Errors could not be avoided in the handling of so many records, and we ask our readers to bear this in mind as you examine this book.

No distinction is made here in rank, branch of service or service record. Rank, location and status of the individual has probably changed several times since the information herein contained was assembled. Yet the book serves to remind the reader that the record of this territory in World War II is exceptionally good.

Our thanks to friends and relatives who furnished the information and pictures, and our deep appreciation of your patience and understanding of the problems that confronted us in the production of this record.
